

Trainee representative for IQILS steering group

Background

Improving Quality in Liver Services (IQILS) is an accreditation programme designed to improve the quality of care of liver services in the UK. The IQILS accreditation process involves self and external peer assessment to evaluate the service against a set of multi-professional standards to promote a culture of continuous quality improvement.

Position

IQILS has a steering group who provide expert advice and guidance to the programme, ensuring its good governance and oversight, and taking responsibility for developing the programme and planning its future direction.

The steering group meets twice a year, typically face to face, though currently these meetings are taking place remotely. Membership includes the programme office team, clinical lead and representatives from BASL, BSG and patient organisations. Members will be sent steering group papers before the meeting for review, which will be discussed during the meeting.

We are looking for an engaged hepatology trainee registrar, who will represent trainees on the steering group and be an ambassador for the programme. The individual needs to have demonstrable commitment to a career in hepatology and an interest in accreditation as a means of improving quality. This is a new position that the individual can help to shape. The individuals will working closely with the programme manager and clinical lead on projects to support the IQILS programme. This is an unpaid role, but expenses are covered.

Next steps

If you would like to apply for this role, please email a short statement, no longer than one page, on why you would like to be involved and your CV to askiqils@rcplondon.ac.uk by Friday 28 August. To find our further information about the programme and process of accreditation, please visit <https://www.iqils.org/>

if you would like to talk through the role or have any questions, please contact the IQILS programme manager, Madeline Bano at askiqils@rcplondon.ac.uk.

The Royal College of Physicians (RCP) believes that equality of opportunity is fundamental in whatever way individuals become involved with the RCP, whether as physicians, physicians-in-training or staff. It welcomes and actively seeks to recruit people to its activities regardless of race, religion, ethnic origin, disability, age, gender and sexual orientation. The RCP aims to reflect the diversity of its members in all its committee, senior roles and staff.